History Subject Overview

The Appleton School.
Subject: History

Curriculum Intent (Covering Year 7 to 13)

What are your aims linked to the curriculum (National Curriculum and Specification criteria):

The aim of the History curriculum at the Appleton School is to provide students with enquiry based learning which sparks a passion for the subject and a broad foundation of knowledge to take into further education and their wider life. We are developing the curriculum to not only give students a secure understanding of Britain’s past but also to put British history within the context of the wider world so that students can accurately make comparisons and judgements. The History curriculum at the Appleton school is designed to help pupils to understand the complexity of people’s lives, the process of change, the diversity of societies and relationships between different groups, as well as their own identity and the challenges of their time. The study of History is a vital undertaking as it equips students to ask perceptive questions, think critically, weigh evidence, sift arguments, and develop perspective and judgement. The embedding of source enquiry and the use of historical interpretations across all key stages allows students to constantly be stretched and challenged, not just through the amount of historical narrative that is unravelled across their study but through the interpretation and analysis of contemporary evidence and the work of historians.

If students choose to continue their study of History at GCSE they will be challenged to continue and extend their study of a range of specific events, periods and societies in local, British, and wider world history; and of the wide diversity of human experience. Building on the skills developed at key stage three they will also continue to engage in historical enquiry in order to develop as independent learners and as critical and reflective thinkers. The study of History at GCSE will develop students’ analytical skills and they will be encouraged to ask relevant questions about the past, to investigate issues critically and to make valid historical claims by using a range of sources in their historical context. Evaluation is also at the centre of their GCSE study as students are required to develop an awareness of why people, events and developments have been accorded historical significance and how and why different interpretations have been constructed about them. They will also be challenged to organise and communicate their historical knowledge and understanding in different ways and reach substantiated conclusions.

The provision for A Level History at the Appleton School builds upon the strengths of the GCSE course. Students complete the AQA A Level specification which requires a study of 3 diverse units covering a chronology from the Tudors to the end of the Cold War. Students expand their knowledge of British History with linear links from KS3 and KS4 covering both the causes of the Tudor rebellions 1485-1587 within the NEA component of the course and the study of the British Empire 1850-1967. The Cold War unit broadens the students’ understanding of world history covering, in particular, America, Russia and Asia. Within the three components, students at KS5 develop their skills of source analysis. Primary and secondary sources are assessed to a very high standard, addressing provenance and utility. Students are encouraged to find and investigate their own source materials which develops their independent research skills which will support them in their further education. Students develop excellent written communication skills through extended answers, in contrast to the shorter essays at KS4. Students are judged on their quality of communication and ability to evaluate statements with balanced viewpoints, clear personal conclusions and excellent contextual knowledge.

How is the curriculum delivered?

The History curriculum at Key Stage Three is divided into modules which are generally completed half-termly, with the fundamental knowledge, description, analysis and source skills consistently being developed and reinforced across units whether they be focused on a breadth or depth study. Alongside our enquiries, we have also developed a focus on local history with “meanwhile nearby” examples scattered across the curriculum to ensure that students are always reflecting and developing their understanding of their local area. Furthermore, we have built in “meanwhile elsewhere” tasks for homework which will provide students with the opportunity to further extend their knowledge of world history across the time periods that we study. Importantly, our schemes of work at Key Stage Three build on the skills that students have already acquired in Key Stage Two; this continues as Key Stage Four extends Key Stage Three learning, with Key Stage Five then developing Key Stage Four learning. We are constantly reflecting on our practice and using academic research to shape the delivery and planning of our curriculum, for example we have increased the amount of recall and interleaving across the key stages. Moreover, in both Key Stage Three and Key Stage Four we use setting determined to ensure that every child is challenged at the right level. The Key Stage 5 curriculum is developed in 3 stages, breaking down the course components. Lessons interleave content and homework is used strongly to support ‘flipped learning’ in order to maximise lesson learning time. ‘Meanwhile nearby’ tasks continue to be used when relevant to provide linear links to the prior Key Stages.

How is the curriculum assessed?

Across all year groups, formal, summative assessments take place three times, testing students on the knowledge and skills they have developed recently, but importantly also in previous units. However, with each unit there are prescriptive assessed pieces of work that all classes must complete, allowing for consistency across the department, enabling the effective monitoring of student progress. We use GCSE grades, level descriptors and grade boundaries to assess student work, meaning that students become familiar and confident with these terms as they progress through the school. In Years 10, 11, 12 and 13, students will sit formal mock examinations in exam conditions in the school hall at least twice each academic year to allow them to familiarise themselves with formal exam protocol. Furthermore, moderation takes place frequently during department time to ensure consistency in terms of assessed work, in addition to supporting the CPD needs of staff. Where assessments show gaps in learning, students will be invited to attend catch-up or intervention sessions which can then be measured for impact, these gaps are also overcome through the interleaving and revisiting of content and skills which has been embedded in our curriculum.
How is the curriculum enriched (through speakers/visits/clubs) to generate a love of learning?

- Archaeology and Ancient History club.
- HET Holocaust Day online opportunities.
- Remembrance day activities.
- Black History month
- Commemoration of key historical anniversaries of events and people e.g. VE Day, Martin Luther King

What skills and knowledge do students bring with them from Key Stage 2 to Year 7?

- The ability to order significant events, movements and dates on a timeline. The understanding that some historical events occurred concurrently in different locations. The concept of clear narratives within and across periods studied. The identifying of connections, contrasts and trends over time and similarities / differences between homes within periods of time.
- The ability to identify key questions for their own lines of enquiry and to select a range of appropriate sources relevant to answer the key question. The consideration of reliability when drawing conclusions about what they have found out.
- Key facts relating to significant individuals, events, periods of time and civilisations from across the Key Stage 2 curriculum.

What skills and knowledge do students bring with them from Year 7 to Year 8?

- Their extended knowledge and understanding of British history and the wider world before c1900.
- The ability to form their own historical enquiry. They will also be able to ask questions based on their learning and to make judgements on historical events. They will have a practiced ability to use sources to support their understanding and to form conclusions.
- The ability to identify differences between interpretations and to consider why factors have been considered to be historically significant.
- The ability to organise and communicate historical knowledge and understanding.

What skills and knowledge do students bring with them from Year 8 to Year 9?

- Their extended knowledge and understanding of British history and the wider world.
- The ability to form their own historical enquiry. They will also bring their ability to ask relevant questions and to make judgements based on interpretations and sources.
- The knowledge of reasons why factors are considered to be historically significant and the ability to recognise differences between interpretations.
- The ability to organise and communicate historical knowledge and understanding.
What skills and knowledge do students bring with them from Year 9 to Year 10?

- Their extended knowledge and understanding of British history and the wider world. Including the early beginnings of their GCSE course and their wider study of history at Key Stage Three.
- The ability to undertake their own historical enquiry. They will also bring their ability to ask relevant questions and to construct their own historical claims based on the use of sources and interpretations.
- The knowledge of factors which might have led to factors being interpreted as historically significant and the reasons for differences between interpretations.
- The ability to organise and communicate historical knowledge and understanding, referring to a wide range of examples and with a focus on explanation and analysis.

What skills and knowledge do students bring with them from Year 10 to Year 11?

- Their extended knowledge and understanding of British history and the wider world. Including the beginnings of their GCSE course and their wider study of history at Key Stage Three.
- The ability to undertake their own historical enquiry and to be reflective of their investigation. They will also bring their ability to ask relevant questions and to construct their own well developed historical claims based on the use of sources and interpretations.
- Their consideration as to why factors have been interpreted as historically significant and the reasons for differences between interpretations.
- The ability to organise and communicate historical knowledge and understanding effectively.

What skills and knowledge do students bring with them from Key Stage 4 to Year 12?

- Their developed and extended knowledge and understanding of British history and the wider world.
- Their refined ability to undertake their own historical enquiry and to be critical and reflective as independent learners. This would include being well rehearsed in investigating their own questions critically and to make valid and well developed historical claims based on a range of sources.
- A skill for analysing why factors have been interpreted as historically significant and the reasons for differences between interpretations.
- A practiced ability to organise and communicate historical knowledge and understanding.
What skills and knowledge do students bring with them from Year 12 to Year 13?

- Students build upon the contextual knowledge gained in Year 12 to apply to the remaining parts of the Year 13 course - this enhances their written answers and demonstrates a broad understanding.
- Students bring an ability to analyse primary and secondary sources to a high level which provides them with a refined and mature approach when they start to complete the NEA Coursework component of the course.
- Students bring with them the ability to write well balanced, well evidenced and strongly evaluated essays within the time frame of the exam questions due to the practice in Year 12.

| Year 9 | The Cold War | American Civil Rights | GCSE HISTORY
| Paper One: Crime and Punishment |

The Cold War

What prior learning is to be revisited?
- Students will have some context of this event from their study of World War Two in their study of 20th century conflict. They will also have a context of Britain at this time from their study of Post-War Britain.
- They will further develop their analytical skills which have been improved across Key Stage 3.
- Students will also focus further on their ability to construct narrative accounts, which was a focus in their study of Medieval England and the Holocaust.

How will learning from this unit be developed later?
- The writing of narratives and the continued development of description and explanation are continued in Key Stage 4. Narrative Accounts are specifically revisited when students study their History GCSE in Paper 2 when they study the American West.
- The knowledge from this unit will be invaluable as a foundation for their study of History at A-Level.

American Civil Rights

What prior learning is to be revisited?
- Students will have some context of this event from their study of World War Two in their study of 20th century conflict. They will also have a context of Britain at this time from their study of Post-War Britain.
- They will further develop their analytical skills which have been improved across Key Stage 3.
- Students will also focus further on their ability to construct narrative accounts, which was a focus in their study of Medieval England and the Holocaust.

How will learning from this unit be developed later?
- The source and interpretation skills will be further developed in Key Stage 4 when students undertake their Paper 3 source based paper.

GCSE HISTORY

Paper One: Crime and Punishment

What prior learning is to be revisited?
- Students will have some context of this breadth study from their studies of British History at Key Stage 3.
- Students will start the GCSE course with a good understanding of the skills required to undertake this part of the course. Including their ability to describe, to explain causation, to analyse and evaluate historical factors. They will also rely on their ability to evaluate the utility of historical sources and to identify their own historical enquiries based on sources.
- Interleaving sessions will begin after the study of the historic environment of Whitechapel has been taught so that students are already beginning to revisit and master the content and skills from this paper.

How will learning from this unit be developed later?
- The skills required for this section of the GCSE course are revisited in the other papers.
- Interleaving sessions across Years 10 and 11 will allow students to revisit and master their learning from this topic.
- Intervention and revision sessions at the end of Year 11 will also allow students to revisit and master their learning from this topic.

Year 12

Paper 1J British Empire 1850-1967

What prior learning is to be revisited?
- KS3 British Empire scheme of work
- Students will have a good understanding of the context of this period from their study of the British Empire in KS3 which will allow them to better understand their Unit 1 study.
- Students will start this unit of the A-Level course with a good understanding of the skills required to undertake this part of the course. Including their ability to describe, to explain causation, and to analyse historical factors. They will also revisit source and interpretation skills from GCSE Paper 1 and 3 as well as their Key Stage 3 study, including; the ability to make inferences, to evaluate the utility of sources, to explain differences between historical interpretations and to evaluate the credit of different interpretations needed for GCE AO3.
- Interleaving sessions will take place every week to allow students to recap, recall and improve the knowledge and skills needed for all their A-level papers.

How will learning from this unit be developed later?
- The skills required for this section of the A-Level course are revisited in the other course components.
- Interleaving sessions across Year 12 will allow students to revisit and master their learning from this topic.
- Intervention and revision sessions at the end of Year 12 will also allow students to revisit and master their learning from this topic.
- Continue to develop breadth of understanding of this unit through coverage of more of the context such as the extent of change and continuity.

Paper 2R Cold War 1945-91

What prior learning is to be revisited?
- KS3 Cold War study
- Students will have a good understanding of the context of this period from their study of the Cold War in KS3 which will allow them to better understand their Unit 2 study.
- Students will have awareness of different political systems through their study of KS4 Paper 3 Weimar and Nazi Germany
- Students will start this unit of the A-Level course with a good understanding of the skills required to undertake this part of the course. Including their ability to describe, to explain causation, and to analyse historical factors. They will also revisit source and interpretation skills from GCSE Paper 1 and 3 as well as their Key Stage 3 study, including; the ability to make inferences, to evaluate the utility of sources, to explain differences between different types of historical primary sources and to evaluate the value of different sources needed for GCE AO2.
- Interleaving sessions will take place every week to allow students to recap, recall and improve the knowledge and skills needed for all their A-level papers.

How will learning from this unit be developed later?
- The skills required for this section of the A-Level course are revisited in the other course components.
- Interleaving sessions across Year 12 will allow students to revisit and master their learning from this topic.
- Intervention and revision sessions at the end of Year 12 will also allow students to revisit and master their learning from this topic.
- Continue to develop depth of understanding of this unit through coverage of more of the context such as analysis of causation and impact of key events.

Year 13

NEA Coursework component:
- Tudor Rebellions 1485-1586

What prior learning is to be revisited?
- KS2 Tudor
- KS3 Early Modern Unit
- KS4 Elizabethan England Unit

Paper 1J British Empire 1850-1967

What prior learning is to be revisited?
- KS3 British Empire scheme of work
- KS4 post war politics study through Weimar and Nazi Germany
- Students build upon the contextual knowledge gained in Year 12 1867-1914 to apply to the remaining parts of the Year 13 course - this enhances their written answers and demonstrates a broad understanding required for the breadth study.
- Students bring an ability to analyse historical interpretations to a high level which provides them with a refined and mature approach when they start to complete the NEA Coursework component of the course.

Exams
Paper 2R Cold War 1945-91

What prior learning is to be revisited?
- KS3 Cold War study
- KS4 post war politics study through Weimar and Nazi Germany
- Students build upon the contextual knowledge gained in Year 12 1945-63 to apply to the remaining parts of the Year 13 course - this enhances their written answers and demonstrates a detailed understanding required for the depth study.
- Students bring an ability to analyse historical primary sources to a high level which provides them with a refined and mature approach when they start to complete the NEA Coursework component of the course.

How will learning from this unit be developed later?
- The skills required for this section of the A-Level course are revisited in the other course components.
- Interleaving sessions across Year 13 will allow students to revisit and master their learning from this topic.
- Intervention and revision sessions at the end of Year 13 will also allow students to revisit and master their learning from this topic.
- Continue to develop depth of understanding of this unit through coverage of more of the context such as analysis of causation and impact of key events.

<td>Ancient Civilisation topic allows students to explore the pre-1066 requirement of the National Curriculum whilst building skills for future units. It builds a foundation which will allow for future success. Water and Health through time unit provides students with a chronological context of the topics that they will be studying throughout their KS3. They will have some insight into the importance of religion, science and living conditions across the period that we study.</td>
<td>The study of Medieval England allows students to delve into a depth study looking at change over a particular period rather than a wider breadth. Students will hopefully be hooked into the start of their chronological study of KS3 History with the events of 1066. The theme for this unit is “power”, this is a key theme that will be revisited throughout the KS3 curriculum and at GCSE, it is therefore essential that they are introduced to the concept relatively early on. It will also help to build on the knowledge that they have gained from the breadth study that they completed in Term 1/2.</td>
<td>It makes sense to follow the Key Stage Three through chronologically and as students already have a good understanding of what came before it is appropriate to begin a study of the Early Modern Period. Some themes will continue through from the previous unit including the significance of religion and the question of who held the power in England during this period.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Year 8 will largely be focused towards the making of modern Britain. A good starting point for this period is the period of innovation from 1750-1900. Students will consider significance and causation in greater depth than they had done in Year 7 as they begin to build more fervently towards the skills needed for the study of GCSE History. They will be required to use the context of Britain that was secured in Year 7 in order to comment on change and continuity. Students will then move on to look at the changes to Britain internationally. This slavery and empire unit will largely give students a context of Britain overseas and how it has been viewed across its history, there will also be time spent on the topic of slavery which it is obviously incredibly important for students to study in order to ensure that their moral standards are questioned and developed. This unit will build upon the analytical skills developed in the previous topic, but will also revisit source and interpretation skills to give students a varied account of the period. These will be refined further after building on the skills learnt in Year 7.</td>
<td>Continuing to look at the development towards modern Britain it is integral that students have an understanding of the impact of the two World Wars. The skills focus of this unit will be to allow students to uncover and analyse the opinions of historians whilst developing their ability to evaluate and use contemporary sources. There will also be many opportunities to develop and build upon the analytical skills that have previously been developed with a focus on evaluation which is a more challenging skill and therefore fitting for students who are considering whether they might like to study GCSE History next year.</td>
<td>One of the few statutory requirements of the KS3 curriculum, I feel that it is important to only study the Holocaust once we can be sure that students have matured enough as historians to help them to focus and appreciate the gravity and significance of the topic. Students will be guided through a unit which has been based on the work of the Holocaust Education Trust. The primary aim of this unit is for students to walk away reconsidering any prejudices that they, or those around them might have, and ready to confront racism and prejudice that they witness. In terms of historical skills, students will be further introduced to the skill of analysing a historical narrative which will allow them to consider process and change over time. Finally, students will complete their enquiry into the Making of modern Britain by analysing change in a unit on post-war Britain. They will study three themes (women, young people and immigration) which will allow students to make comparisons with previously studied time periods and to comment on change over time.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>The extension of Key Stage Three History into Year 9 has allowed us to widen the focus of our curriculum to include a global and political focus. Students will first study American Civil Rights, they will have already gained some understanding here when completing their RS curriculum in Year 8. The study of this topic with a historical context will allow students to further develop their knowledge of more difficult concepts and to undertake evaluation of historical interpretations of the subject so that they might be able to build upon the learning that they have achieved in RS. By this point in the Key Stage 3 curriculum students will be largely confident when working with sources and interpretations and so the study of this unit will allow students to consider more challenging reading and to further refine their practice. Students will then undertake a unit on the Cold War. This subject was chosen to give students a foundation for the knowledge that would be required if they were to opt for A Level History at Appleton. The content matter of this unit is more political, ideological and global than any of our previous units and so students will complete their learning of the Key Stage 3 curriculum with an ambitious and challenging content matter. The focus on narrative accounts, consequence and importance will be very significant for students who opt to continue their study at GCSE as these are some of the skills that students have historically found more challenging.</td>
<td>Students will begin their study of GCSE History at this point. We have chosen to start with Paper One as it offers less complicated content which should be easier to remember, with the support of continued interleaving and intervention, across the course. They will first be introduced to the Historic Environment section of the paper which will be used to revisit and remind students of the variety of skills that they will be expected to undertake when studying GCSE History. They will then move chronologically through the breadth study from c1000 to modern day. Within each time period, of which there are four, students will be learning within the themes of crimes, law enforcement, punishment and case studies. They will also be required to make links between and across time periods.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>In Year 10, students will study for their Paper Two examination. They will begin with their study of the American West as the content is large compared to the number of answers required in the exam, this will give students longer to recall and improve their knowledge as they complete interleaving and revision sessions and revision at home. After the February half term, students will study the Early Elizabethan England section of their Paper Two examination. The skills required on this paper will allow students to continue to develop those practiced in their study of Paper one as some of the skills are transferable. The content itself is less complicated than the American West study and so this should allow for students to be challenged whilst not feeling overwhelmed.</td>

History Curriculum Document

| 11 | In Year 11, students will complete their GCSE History course by undertaking the learning for their Paper three exam. The study of Weimar and Nazi Germany can be complex and over time we have discovered that students are better prepared for this by Year 11. The skills required for this unit are also more technical and so with most skills having been well practiced and rehearsed in Years 9 and 10 (as well as Key Stage 3) it is possible to spend Year 11 refining their source and interpretation skills which are required for success in Paper three. After the February half term, students will begin to revise for their summer examinations based on their performance in mock exams, data analysed by the subject leader, the use of PLCs and the teacher’s professional judgement - this may differ from class to class as we attempt to best cater for the needs of individual students. Revision continues in the final term and students will sit their final GCSE examinations. |
| 12 | The students will complete the two examination units alongside each other. This is beneficial to the students as the courses are so different it is easier to remember their differences. Also some political differences are in both courses which helps to consolidate their learning of political concepts. At the end of each sub section of the course, both units have rigorous assessment which assesses both A01 content and written communication and A02/ A03 source work evaluations. This is based on 25 mark knowledge tests and formal A Level questions on both essay style and source work responses. |
| 13 | Students begin to look at their NEA coursework component on the causes of the Tudor rebellions 1485-1586. This links back to KS3 and the KS4 Elizabethan England unit. The students continue to complete the two examination units alongside each other. This is beneficial to the students as the courses are so different it is easier to remember their differences. Also some key events e.g. WWII and Suez Crisis 1956 as well as political differences are in both courses which helps to consolidate their learning. At the end of each sub section of the course, both units have rigorous full A-Level mock assessment which assesses both A01 content and written communication and A02/ A03 source work evaluations. This is based on 25 mark knowledge tests and formal A-Level questions on both essay style and source work responses. |
